Introduction
The Department of Humanities and Philosophy at BYU–Idaho has the following goals:

- Help students differentiate between the workings of the mind and those of the heart.
- Help students discover avenues of both spiritual and intellectual enlightenment through the arts.
- Promote cultural literacy and enhance students’ abilities to function in society by exposing them to a broad body of knowledge important to our culture.
- Advocate a holistic understanding of culture by elucidating the connections between historical events, philosophical movements, and styles of art, architecture, music, and literature.
- Assist students in making connections between the cultural achievements of the past and their own search for meaning and fulfillment in life.
- Encourage students to think deeply, feel acutely, and communicate precisely.
- Inspire students to reassess their own values and to bring their listening and viewing habits into conformity with the standards outlined in the 13th Article of Faith.
- Lay the foundation for a lifetime of arts enjoyment and appreciation.

In the words of President Gordon B. Hinckley, Humanities “gives an aspect of living that is essential. You need technology. You need the professions. You need all of those things, but we need the heart also, and the humanities speak to the heart, men’s aspirations for the good and the beautiful.” LDS Church News March 19, 2005

Minors
The Humanities and Philosophy minors are a natural complement to majors such as English, History, Music, Art, and Foreign Language by providing a broader interdisciplinary perspective to these disciplines. Moreover, due to their broad foundation of knowledge and skills, students with a Humanities or Philosophy background are sought after for graduate programs in medicine, law, and business, as well as in the social sciences. These minors will also be of interest to students of unrelated disciplines who wish to temper their technical studies with a curriculum that will prepare them for a lifetime of clear thinking and enjoyment of the arts.

Clusters
A Humanities or Philosophy cluster is an excellent complement to virtually any university program. It allows students to achieve greater understanding of cultural and intellectual connections across multiple academic disciplines. We welcome and encourage students to cluster within the department and benefit from the depth and enjoyment such coursework provides.
